All Self Published Authors

Hard copy books are done. Are you a self published author who doesn't have an ONLINE ebook available for your ONLINE audience?

If so, you're not alone! I speak with authors just like you every-day. Online ebooks are HUGE right now. In the US alone, Online ebooks are a $2.1 billion dollar industry.

You know you need an ONLINE ebook, but you don't have the time or expertise to create a professional product yourself.

While this problem is common among self published authors, failure to resolve it can lead to much BIGGER problems for your writing career down the road, like:

- You Won't Be Able to Successfully Sell Your Book
- You Won't Be Able to Grow a Reading Audience
- You Will Reduce ONLINE Speaking Opportunities

GRANT WRITING TRAINING

9 Questions to Ask Yourself Before Seeking a Grant

Most grants are awarded to existing nonprofit organizations to establish or to expand worthy causes, programs and services. Before seeking grants to support your organizations work and projects, here are nine important questions that you must consider.

1. Is there a fit with our mission? Every organization has a purpose and a mission. You must define that purpose and mission to be able to identify projects and services that meet the purpose and goals a potential grant funder.
2. Does your request for grant funding exceed 15% of your total operating budget? If your grant proposal represents over 15% of your total operating budget, your organization runs the risk of being too dependent on grant funding and unappealing a to potential grant funder.
3. Is the timetable of the proposed funding sufficient to initiate, stabilize, and evaluate the program design? There must be a reasonable relationship between what your organization proposes to do and the time frame and resources that are required to accomplish what you propose to do.
4. What funding sources would be required to sustain funding after the grant funds have been spent? Sustainability or “other funding” is an important consideration for many grant funders. For most applicants, funding sources prefer to build worthy programs that are self-sustaining over a long period of time.
5. Do you have qualified personnel willing to come on board for a “short term” grant funded project? Grant-funded programs are usually “short term” and many qualified employees usually require stability with a “long term” regular paycheck.
6. How does your proposed project fit with your organizations and your potential funder’s strategic plan? A strategic plan is normally required by most grant funders that not only serves as the basis for your work, but also serves as a way to ensure your success with the funds that are granted to help meet your organization’s goals and program projections.
7. Do you have community support for this project? Community support helps to give a grant funder confidence to support your program with their grant dollars. Community support also provides additional community allies and possible access to additional funding sources to help sustain the program after grant funds are gone.

8. Does your project fit with your current programs and services? If the project is not a good fit for your existing programs and services, then the grant funder may not see the project or program as a fundable project.

9. Is your target population consistent with your current service base? If you are expanding services to a new population, most funders may feel that this will require a timely learning curve that may complicate the success of your funded project. This could easily lead to being denied for funding.
